

The Emotional Side of Infertility

By Lorry Belanger, R.N.

IVF Nurse

(top, right in picture)

Infertility is more than just a physical condition for most couples. It is an emotional and social condition as well, carrying with it intense feelings. Infertile couples commonly experience anger and frustration, loss of control, isolation from family and friends, depression and grief. These emotions may at times seem overwhelming to a couple struggling with infertility. And they often get worse around the holiday season.

At our Center, we understand the emotional and health care needs of infertile couples and we focus on what they want most – a baby. We have expertise in the latest technologies and treatments in infertility. We also offer the compassion and support services that will help couples cope with the special emotional needs in dealing with fertility problems. Our highly trained, compassionate staff helps each step of the way. And we start by giving couples the hope, support and medical care they need to conceive.

We are among the largest and most successful fertility programs in this area. Our results and reputation are also among the best because we provide the most appropriate medical care in an environment that is sensitive to your patients' needs.

At The Center, we take great pride in our successes. Not only do we focus on bringing new babies into the world, but we also place a high priority on the well-being of the couples we treat. So, whether our patients are successful in conceiving a child or not, we find that all of our couples become a part of our extended family. Couples stay in touch with us even after they are no longer receiving care.

Our ultimate goal here at The Center is to help maximize patients' chances of conceiving. We believe in providing couples with honest and realistic information that helps them to form their own decisions and expectations. We inform them about all of the alternatives for treatment. We explain what the different options can offer them and provide objective data on success rates with and without various treatments.

Lastly, and perhaps most important, we always make ourselves available to help our patients. We can help the decision making process and objectively let them know when we feel it is time to move on to other treatments, or, if necessary, stop treatment.

WE ARE ACTIVELY RECRUITING EGG DONORS!

For many couples, the only way to achieve a pregnancy is through egg donation, when women donate their healthy eggs to couples who are unable to conceive on their own. At The Center for Advanced Reproductive Services, we're looking for anonymous donors to help couples achieve their dream of having children. Potential donors must be:

- between the ages of 21 and 33
- a non-smoker
- willing to undergo screening by our medical team

Compensation of $5000 is given to adequately cover expenses, time and effort.

Interested donors should call:

(860) 679-8491

All inquiries are kept strictly confidential.